

Why Volunteer?

Camaraderie: Organizing group days of service provide co-workers and their supervisors an opportunity to work together and get to know one another outside the walls of the workplace.

Corporate Culture: It's well known that employees want to work for companies that care. America's Charities Snapshot Employee Research found that 71% of employees surveyed say its imperative or very important to work where the culture is supportive of giving and volunteering.

Meaningful Work: Volunteering provides a meaningful way for employees to put their skills to work and gives them the chance to grow and develop other professional skills.

Financial Stability: Engaged employees are happier, healthier and perform at a higher level. A UnitedHealth Group Health and Volunteering Study states that people who volunteer, report they feel better emotionally, mentally and physically and that employee volunteering is linked to greater workplace productivity and satisfaction.
